Message

I am happy that the 2nd Edition of the Raisina Dialogue is being jointly hosted by the Ministry of External Affairs and the Observer Research Foundation from January 17-19, 2017. On behalf of the Government of India, I extend a very warm welcome to all the participants.

At a time when the world is undergoing major changes, I am glad that the organisers have chosen a very pertinent theme for the Dialogue, "New Normal: Multilateralism with Multipolarity". This is not only a very relevant issue in the context of complex challenges and shifts we are witnessing today but also an issue that is engaging global leaders, strategic experts and thinkers around the world.

I am confident that the different panels of the Dialogue will have enriching discussions on the various dimensions of the theme and throw new light into possible ways for the global community to move forward and address the issues related to it. I convey my best wishes for the success of the deliberations.

Sushma Swaraj

Message by Foreign Secretary of India

RAISINA DIALOGUE was part of our efforts to encourage the emergence of a suitable platform for deliberations on the important geo-political issues of the day. I am delighted that within less than one year of its launch in March 2016, its 2nd edition has elicited such an enthusiastic response. We are happy to see that senior leaders, leading thinkers and strategic experts from a wide variety of countries and regions are participating in this year's conference.

Today, we are in the midst of far reaching changes not just in India, but also in our broader region and the world at large. The landscape is not only changing but also shifting at a rapid pace. New voices are seeking to be heard not just in developing and emerging countries but also in the developed world. The old multilateral order set up in the aftermath of Second World War, is being increasingly challenged. The principles of the old multilateral order and institutions built to serve them must adapt and adjust to the new realities of an increasingly multi-polar world. I am happy, therefore, that we have chosen the theme "New Normal: Multilateralism with Multipolarity" for this year's edition of the Dialogue.

I would like to thank the Observer Research Foundation which has joined us once again in hosting the Raisina Dialogue this year. I also would like to extend my warmest greetings and welcome to all participants of this Dialogue.

—Dr. S. Jaishankar

Message from the Director, Observer Research Foundation

It gives me great pleasure to welcome distinguished global leaders and thinkers to the second edition of The Raisina Dialogue, a joint initiative of India's Ministry of External Affairs (MEA) and the Observer Research Foundation (ORF).

Conceived in 2016, The Raisina Dialogue is an Indian initiative to host the world's leading thinkers in a discussion on emerging global issues shaping the world order in this century.

This year we have the privilege of having the Prime Minister, Shri Narendra Modi inaugurate the conference and lay down his vision for India's role in the global order. The Prime Minister has infused a new dynamism into India's foreign policy, personally investing time and energy to secure India's place on the global high table.

The Raisina Dialogue is fast becoming an amphitheater of ideas where political, strategic and military leaders from around the world discuss the most pressing issues of our time. Last year the Dialogue began by looking at the diffused nature of agency in an increasingly connected world. It saw over 120 delegates from 40 countries gather to debate the dynamics of 'Asian Connectivity.'

The 2017 edition will see over 250 delegates from 65 countries look at the return of big politics in shaping the world around us. The theme of the conference, "The New Normal: Multipolarity and Multilateralism", seeks to provoke conversations in this direction.

From its inception, the Raisina Dialogue has been conceived by ORF as a platform that transcends national and territorial boundaries to serve as a forum owned, shaped and nurtured by each one of you, its participants. Its success is embedded in the collective energy, creativity and ideas of its participants.

This year we have also introduced into this forum the Raisina Young Fellows programme, where we have 39 young leaders from 26 countries join us for these discussions. These emerging leaders will be responsible for devising solutions of tomorrow.

We hope that in these uncertain times, the next few days will give shape to new structures and forms of engagement for the solutions that we need in our common quest for global peace, prosperity, stability in the 21st century.

We welcome you all again and look forward to these deliberations over the next three days.

—Sunjoy Joshi

Introduction

by Samir Saran & Ashok Malik

FEW would disagree that at this moment, we are witnessing exceptional energy and dynamism in India's foreign policy and engagement with the global order. The country's political and strategic aspirations are finally beginning to keep pace with its economic growth, international trade profile and the sheer wealth of its human resources. From an emerging economy, India is moving to another echelon. It now aspires to be among the world's leading powers, a stabilising influence in the world system, a rule-setter and a net security provider in contested and fragile spaces and frontiers: from the oceans to cyberspace, from the environment to sensitive technologies.

The Raisina Dialogue is a manifestation of this new thinking, and of the perceived need for India to help sculpt and collaborate in the crafting of the discourse that defines our age. This is being done not in the form of propaganda or a one-sided message, but, so typically of India, as a structured and yet an informal conversation—an intellectual churning that, to draw from Indian mythology, seeks to be the Kumbh Mela of geopolitics and geo-economics.

As co-hosts of the Raisina Dialogue, we have been overwhelmed by the response to the initiative. The second edition of the Dialogue has built on the success of the first conference in 2016. This year we have drawn 250 international participants and speakers from 65 countries. We are both happy and humbled that the Raisina Dialogue has emerged as a destination sought out by ministers and diplomats, military and strategic leaders, analysts and academics. We view this as a validation of our efforts, but much more than that, a validation of the renewed importance of India, as well as of the search for answers to pressing contemporary questions.

In the past year, those questions have multiplied. Several of the certitudes of our world have been challenged and have even crumbled. Many cherished and familiar institutions and ideational narratives have had to cede primacy. The multilateral architecture of the postwar world—the one created in the aftermath of World War II, as well the post-Cold War global village—has been shaken. The Raisina Dialogue has been mindful of this, and the discussions planned for the second edition are both familiar and yet remarkably different from 2016.

As we enter 2017, 'Big Politics' has returned with an unusual ferocity. Issues and themes of nationalism and nation-states, of identity and faith, community and ethnicity, have experienced a resurgence. The open and liberal trading order we were all accustomed to is no longer a given. There is a tendency to give in to protectionist impulses. The viability of the international security regime and the multilateral mechanism underpinning it has been put under the scanner. All of these are concerns that will inform and, we hope, invigorate the Raisina Dialogue.

The certainties of yesterday have given way to the tectonic shifts and the roller-coaster politics of today. Nevertheless, the triangle can only be complete with the optimism of tomorrow, and through an invocation of the leaders of the future. This has led us to inaugurate the Raisina Young Fellows' Programme, to identify and help groom the standout minds of the first half of the 21st century. This year's Raisina Young Fellows programme is comprised of 39 leaders under 35, from 26 countries. They have arrived from all continents—from Ecuador in South America to Serbia in Europe to Laos in Asia—and bring with them a breadth of experience from government and the military, business and banking, think tanks and the media.

The Raisina Dialogue is an Indian-designed and curated platform—but it does not belong exclusively to India. It is the location of a complex discourse, and is a patient and curious listener to even contradictory and paradoxical voices. It is intended as a reflection of the key concerns and themes at the time of its hosting. It is also intended as a venue open to all, including those who are otherwise on opposite sides, or perhaps unable to share a stage elsewhere.

In keeping with India's heritage of hospitality, at the Raisina Dialogue dignitaries and diplomats, admirals and analysts can speak to, with and at each other. They can agree and disagree; and can agree to disagree.

We wish you cheerful, cerebral and combative next three days. ■

EU-India Think Tank Twinning Initiative

January 17, 2017, New Delhi

The ‘EU—India Think Tank Twinning’ initiative aims to facilitate the establishment of linkages among European and Indian entities that might lead to long term partnerships focusing on topics of interest to both EU and India. In 2015, events and workshop were organised in Delhi and Brussels to identify the relevant think tanks and create an engagement plan for them. Orientation meetings were held both in Delhi and Brussels followed by a conference in Delhi (2-3 November 2015) which brought together more than 40 Indian and European organisations to discuss about the EU priority topics with focus on India-EU relations. Twinning of EU and India based think tanks was facilitated in 2016.

The annual meeting being organised on January 17, 2017 in New Delhi, in conjunction with Raisina Dialogue (17-19 Jan) will share experiences, lessons and findings with the aim to provide advice on how to proceed forward.
